FRANKFORT JOURNALS.

LONDON,—12TH JUNE 1818.

On the 10th, after 12 o'clock, the avenues the House of Lords were filled with ladies egantly dressed and an immense croud of eople.

The duchess of Cambridge and the grand uke Michel were present, the prince was aced near the throne.

His royal Highness the Prince Regent ar-ived with a large suite, when he had ascend-d the throne, the usher of the black rod was ent to the House of Commons to desire their attendance. The speaker accompanied by a great number of members immediately repair-ed to the House of Lords, and after they had taken their places at the bar, the Prince Re-gent pronounced the following speech.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN.

It is with profound regret that I find myself again obliged to announce that there has been no alteration in the state of His Majesty's health.

I continue to receive from foreign powers the strongest assurances of their friendly dis-positions towards this country, and of their desire to maintain the general tranquillity.

I appreciate highly the attention which you have bestowed on the important and multifa-rious objects which have been submitted to your consideration.

I feel a personal satisfaction that you have, in consequence of my recommendation, adopt-ed measures for increasing the number of places of public worship of the established religion, and I confidently hope that these measures will produce the happiest effects on the piety and moral habits of the people.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

I thank you for the subsidies which you ave granted me for the present year, and I ighly approve of the measures adopted for educing the unconsolidated debt.

I am happy to be able to inform you that he public revenue continues to improve daily.

LORDS AND GENTLEMEN.

ion, I have thought it

This contest, prolonged during so many years, and more particularly the efforts which have terminated it, have been followed, in our country as well as the rest of Europe, by difficulties and evils in the interior. But altho deeply sensible of the burden which then pressed on his Majesty's subjects, I regarded the future without dismay, in the unbounded confidence I had in the solidity of the resources of the British Empire, and in the alleviation which might be expected from the return and continuance of peace, and in the patience, public spirit and energy of the nation. These hopes have not been disappointed.

A happy amelioration has shewn itself in the interior provinces of our country, which promises to continue uninterrupted. I am perfectly convinced that the constant loyalty and efforts of all classes of His Majesty's subjects will secure these continually encreasing indications of the national prosperity, by diffusing throughout a submission to the laws, and attachment to the constitution to which we owe all the blessings we can enjoy."

The speech being finished, the Lord Chancellor, after receiving the orders of the Prince Regent, declared the Parliament dissolved.
